Songs Along a Stony Road

A film by George Csicsery and Chris Teerink

SONGS ALONG A STONY ROAD follows musicologist Zoltán Kallós on his visits to musicians in villages around Transylvania and Romanian Moldavia. He has collected music in these places for half a century.

Transylvania and Moldavia are lands where several ethnic groups have lived in adjacent villages for centuries. Their music reflects these proximities, and for musicologists and ethnographers, the region is a treasure trove as rich and diverse as any in Europe.

The 70-minute film is the product of five expeditions undertaken between 1999 and 2006. Everyone in the film is from the Magyar-speaking villages of Transylvania and from two of the regions inhabited by Csángó people: the valleys of the Gyimes Mountains, and Csángó villages sprinkled along the rolling foothills on the eastern slopes of the Carpathians in Romania's Moldavia.

The singers, violinists, and flute players in Kallós's world are a thinning breed. Songs Along a Stony Road depicts a vanishing heritage.

In Hungarian and Romanian with English subtitles. TRT: 69:30 ISBN No. 978-0-45807-0
